Share My Lessons - Tired of teaching the same lessons? Visit Share My Lessons and find thousands of lesson plans created by other teachers and shared on this website. Searches can be done by subject area (including SPED, gifted, and foreign language), grade level, and even lessons aligned with Missouri standards. There is even a section for Professional Development lessons. If you want new ideas, this is the website to view.

2

Twiducate - Do you want to include social media in your classroom, but are worried about privacy issues? Twiducate allows you to create a classroom page where students can communicate with the teacher and other students in their class. Teachers are given a code to invite students to join, and then lessons and ideas can be shared within that group. No emails are required for students to join. Classes can participate in discussion groups, and access videos, documents, and images. This website provides a safe place for classes to share ideas.

The Big List of Educational Grants and Resources - This is great source to use if you are looking for ideas for grants, contests, and awards, or even free classroom resources. It is updated weekly to give you the most current information and deadlines for grants and contests. This list is part of the website www.edutopia.org that also provides many other resources for teachers to use. Search through their list of topics to find videos and ideas that can help you in your classroom.
