

Tech 2-3

09.06.17

Google Classroom continues to be a favorite management tool and since its rollout in 2014 has surpassed the 1 billion mark of assignments submitted. Since 2014, Google has regularly listened to educators and continues to make updates. The updates for this school year include single user view for both the teacher and student, reordering of classes, decimal grades, sync and upload users using school directory sync, display classroom code easier, transfer ownership of class(es), and the allowing of importing Google Form Quiz grades into Classroom. Teachers are encouraged to share any tips they have using the hashtag #FirstDayofClassroom on Twitter. Remember, you don't need a Twitter account to view Twitter.

A Quick Look at New Features of Google Classroom

Math teachers, Kahoot is making gamification easy for you! Kahoot Studio has released a set of math games created by Kahoot that align to standards. Searchable games allow the teacher to view game and answers before playing and edit an existing game to fit classroom needs. Other curriculums, don't worry, Kahoot Studio plans to roll out other curricular areas in the future.

If you are looking for some added excitement with your Kahoot game, connect with another classroom in a different building, district, or state and pit your classes against each other! View these tips from Kahoot Global Classroom to get inspired and learn how you can do this in your classroom.

Screensharing Directions

List.ly is a great way to add content to your classroom, blog, newsletter, interactive bulletin board, or hyper docs and get students involved. With List.ly, you can create, curate, and share a list with students, teachers, parents, or clubs. Lists can include links, videos, images, and audio. Collaboration with students can include voting on content and moving ranks, adding comments, and adding content to the list. Lists can be made public or kept private. With a free account, your first three lists are free with unlimited items! After three free premium lists, you can make one list per week and add ten items per day.

Check out this example from South High Library